The reader will gain a deeper knowledge of the challenges and approaches to consumer behaviour and learn about the theoretical and empirical challenges of studying and managing customer experience management. It also considers the post-modern consumer, which requires a move away from the purely rationalist perspective of traditional marketing and provides methodological support for firms and scholars who wish to measure cognitive, emotional and behavioural consumer reactions. More specifically, it explores the changes in consumer behaviours, the limitations of traditional measurement approaches and the importance of capturing small insights with neuromarketing metrics, with a chapter contributed by a leading expert. A new three-point perspective on consumer behaviours is set out that combines behaviour (what people do) with the declared (what people say) and the perceived (what people feel). This approach acknowledges the complexity of consumer behaviours and the methodological bias derived from the use of traditional marketing techniques (principally the survey) or from big data. Only a holistic perspective can capture the heterogeneous nature of consumer behaviour. The book thereby takes up the theoretical debate about the definition, management and measurement of customer behaviour. It also examines measurement methodologies, that has received little attention elsewhere. Besides addressing the scientific community in the field, it will also be a valuable practical resource for marketing managers, entrepreneurs and consultants who implement innovative strategies to manage the customer experience. This valuable guide assists you in selecting the ship best suited to your taste, advises you on how to prepare for your cruise, and explains to expect once you are onboard. In an engaging and anecdotal social history, Siân's Maiden Voyages explores how women's lives were transformed by the Golden Age of ocean liner travel between Europe and North America. During the early twentieth century, transatlantic travel was the pride of the great ocean liners. It was an extraordinary undertaking made by many women, whose lives were changed forever by their journeys between the Old World and the New. Some traveled for leisure, some for work; others to reinvent themselves or find new opportunities. They were celebrities, migrants and refugees, aristocrats and crew members whose stories have mostly remained untold—until now. Maiden Voyages is a fascinating portrait of the era, the ships themselves, and these women as they crossed the globe. The ocean liner was a microcosm of contemporary society, divided by class: from the luxury of the upper class playground for the rich and famous, to the cramped conditions of steerage or third class travel. In first class you'll meet A-listers like Marlene Dietrich, Wallis Simpson, and Josephine Baker; the second class carried a new generation of professional and independent women, like pioneering interior designer Sibyl Colefax. In steerage, you'll follow the journey of émigré Maria Riffelmacher as she escapes poverty in Europe. Between decks is a crew of female workers, including Violet "The Unsinkable Stewardess" Jessop, who survived the Titanic disaster. Entertaining and informative, Maiden Voyages captures the golden age of ocean liners through the stories of the women whose transatlantic journeys changed the shape of society on both sides of the globe. This illustrated history by a trio of experts is the definitive reference on the Apollo 11 and lunar modules. It traces the vehicles' design, development, and operation in space. More than 100 photographs and illustrations.

"A cruise lover's guide to selecting the right trip, with all the best ports of call." This is the story of the Holland America cruise ship Zaandam, which set sail with a deadly and little-understood stowaway—COVID-19—days before the world shut down in March 2020. This riveting narrative thrilled readers behind the scenes with passengers and crew who were caught unprepared for the deadly ordeal ahead. In early 2020, the world was on edge. An ominous virus was spreading on different continents and no one knew what the coming weeks would bring. Far from the hot spots, the cruise ship Zaandam, owned by Holland America, was preparing to sail from Buenos Aires, Argentina, loaded with 1,200 passengers—Americans, Europeans and South Americans, plus 600 crew. Most passengers were over sixty-five. There was concern about the virus on the news, and it had already killed and sickened passengers on other Holland America ships. But that was oceans away, and escaping to sea at the ends of the earth for a few weeks seemed like it might be a good option. The cruise line had said the voyage (three weeks around the American coastline to see some of the world's most stunning natural wonders and ancient ruins) would go on as scheduled, with no refunds. And it would be safe. Among the travelers there is a retired American superintendent on a dream vacation with his wife of fifty-six years, on a personal quest to see Machu Picchu. There is an Argentine psychologist taking this trip to celebrate her sixty-fourth birthday with her husband, though she finds herself fretting in her cabin on day one, trying to dismiss her fears of what she's hearing in the news. There is an Indonesian laundry manager who's been toiling on Holland America cruise ships for thirty years, sending his monthly paycheck to his family back home. Within days, people aboard Zaandam begin to fall sick. The world's ports shut down. Zaandam becomes a top story on the news and is denied harbor everywhere. With only two doctors aboard and few medical supplies to test for or treat COVID-19, with dwindling food and water, the ship wanders the oceans on an unthinkable journey. Although poor air quality is probably not the hazard that is foremost in peoples' minds as they board planes, it has been a concern for years. Passengers have complained about dry eyes, sore throat, dizziness, headaches, and other symptoms. Flight attendants have repeatedly raised questions about the safety of the air that they breathe. The book Cabin Environment and the Health of Passengers and Crew examines in detail the aircraft environment, air control systems, the sources of chemical and biological contaminants in aircraft cabins, and the toxicological health effects associated with these contaminants. The book provides some recommendations for potential approaches for improving cabin air quality and a surveillance and research program.
